

Caring for your Jewellery

Thank you for your purchase of a Tadblu- Beads of love piece of cremation jewellery.

It is recommended by both the manufacturer and Final Touch Australia that you treat this piece of jewellery with great care. Firstly we recommend that it be taken off for such activities as sleeping, showering, gardening, exercise, swimming etc. Fine jewelry is not insensitive to normal wear, activities or trauma. We are unable to guarantee for damage due to normal wear and tear.

Gold and silver are mold-able, precious materials, soft enough to be processed and shaped. A patina of age and use on handmade surfaces is part of the natural beauty of a piece of gold or silver jewellery.

Keep in mind that rings are exposed more than other jewellery. During the course of a day, human hands are in close contact with a number of hard objects. As a result, the portion of the ring that faces the palm of the hand will be particularly exposed to wear.

Gemstones may have impurities and variations on individual stones. This is not a mistake for the stone, but an exceptional property of a natural product. Two stones can share hues and shapes, but they will never be completely identical. That is why every gem is completely unique. Gemstones as you may know are not as durable as diamonds and can be damaged by general daily wear, we advise care be taken in wearing these. As recommended above, we advise you to take off your jewellery for such activities as sleeping, showering, gardening, exercise, swimming etc.

Leather bracelets are handmade in Belgium with genuine leather. Since leather is a natural product, the colour of the leather can vary from bracelet to bracelet. Keep in mind that light colours are more sensitive to dirt than dark colours.

The colour of the leather can fade if it is exposed to direct sunlight or water. If the bracelet is exposed to water until the leather becomes moist, it may dry out as a result. A neutral leather balm will nourish and help retain the material. Leather bracelets that are used daily will create a patina and give the leather a slightly worn appearance.

We hope this piece of jewellery helps you keep your loved one close.
